Creating a Community Legacy

Statue will celebrate Steamboat's heritage

When you combine clay, two extremely talented hands and the motivation to give back to a small mountain community, you've got a masterpiece in the making. Commissioned for the Steamboat Springs Chamber Resort Association's 100-year anniversary of service, local artist Sandra Graves is creating "Chamber Legacy." The project is a full size, life-like statue of three young children playing on a see-saw, each representing a piece of Steamboat Springs's traditional heritage - our community legacies of mining, ranching and skiing.

As an interactive piece, "Chamber Legacy" symbolizes the Chamber's efforts to educate, promote and advocate for this strong and vital business community. To be placed on the Routt County Courthouse Lawn in downtown Steamboat Springs this summer, the statue is a tribute to Steamboat Springs' rich past, a nod to our flourishing present and a gift that will engage the community for generations to come. It's event a great climbing apparatus for children!

"The process, detail, time and energy to work on a project like this is unparalleled," says Sandra Graves, a member of the local co-op art gallery, Artists' Gallery of Steamboat and a teacher at Steamboat's Lowell Whiteman School. "It really is going to be a great gift to Steamboat Springs."

"This project is something the entire city can be proud of," says Sandy Evans-Hall, Executive Vice President of the Steamboat Springs Chamber Resort Association. "We see this as a gift from the businesses to the community and we look forward to donations to help make this a true community effort."

For information about the "Chamber Legacy" instillation in early July or for more information on the project, please contact Sandy Evans-Hall or Molly Killien at (970) 879-0880.
